

TABLE

FOOD / CULTURE / STORIES

The Slow Sunday Issue

Take your time.

Sunday does not need a grand plan. A good meal, a few familiar faces and a little time can be enough. This issue is an invitation to choose the slower route to the table.

- 03 A seat at the table
- 04 Sunday tomato pasta
- 06 Morning at the market
- 08 A generous table
- 10 Lemon & basil notes

A seat at the table.

Good food turns an ordinary day into something worth remembering.

The table is often the smallest place where a day becomes a shared story. Someone brings bread. Someone moves a chair. A familiar dish arrives and the conversation finds a rhythm of its own. None of these gestures need to be impressive to matter.

A slower lunch begins before the plates are full. It begins in the choice to leave a little time between one task and the next: to taste a tomato, open a window or ask how someone has been. Cooking becomes part of the company rather than a performance apart from it.

There is pleasure in a meal that can change. An extra handful of pasta welcomes an unexpected guest. A bowl of salad makes room for a different appetite. A ripe piece of fruit can be all the finish a long afternoon needs.

The best Sunday table has space for both care and ease. Use the plates you have. Cook something you know. Let the conversation wander. The point is to give everyone, including the cook, a place to sit.

THE SUNDAY RECIPE

Sunday tomato pasta

SERVES 4 / 35 MIN

Ingredients

400 g spaghetti
500 g cherry tomatoes
3 tbsp olive oil
3 garlic cloves, sliced
A pinch of chilli flakes
Fresh basil
Salt and black pepper
Parmesan, to serve

Method

01

ROAST

Heat the oven to 200 C. Toss tomatoes with oil, garlic and chilli. Roast for 20-25 minutes until softened.

02

COOK

Boil the pasta in salted water following the packet directions. Reserve a mug of cooking water before draining.

03

BRING TOGETHER

Toss the pasta with tomatoes and juices. Add pasta water as needed. Finish with basil, pepper and parmesan.

Morning at the market.

Buy with curiosity.

Meet the day before deciding what to cook.

Begin with what looks good rather than a long list. The colour of a peach, the scent of basil or the weight of a loaf can suggest a meal more clearly than a recipe saved weeks ago. A small change of plan can be part of the pleasure.

Ask a simple question. Which tomatoes are ready today? What would you do with this bunch of greens? The answer may be a practical tip, but it may also introduce a different way of thinking about a familiar ingredient.

Choose a few things that work together. Ripe tomatoes need very little help. Good bread makes a useful companion. A handful of herbs can connect several dishes without making the cooking complicated.

Back at home, put the produce where you can see it. Wash what needs washing, taste a piece and decide what can wait. The aim is not to use everything at once; it is to let each ingredient have its moment.

Leave room in the bag for one small surprise. It might become dessert, tomorrow's lunch or the detail that makes the whole visit worth remembering.

Leave room in the bag for one small surprise.

THE ART OF HAVING PEOPLE OVER

A generous table.

Good company deserves an unhurried meal.

Make room for everyone.

The best plan leaves a little space.

01 Keep the menu simple

Choose one main dish you know well. Add something crisp, something to share and an easy finish.

02 Share the small tasks

Let someone slice the bread or pour the water. A shared meal can begin before everyone sits down.

03 Leave the afternoon open

Clear only what needs clearing. Keep a little fruit on the table and let the conversation find its own ending.

Lemon. Basil. Brightness.

A little lemon can lift the finish of a dish. Add the zest for fragrance or a small squeeze of juice at the table. Taste as you go.

Treat basil gently. Tear a few leaves over warm pasta just before serving, with a little extra for the salad.

Ordinary days. Good stories.

We made this issue around a simple thought: a meal does not have to be elaborate to be memorable. Care can be a well-chosen ingredient, a place at the table or a little time given freely.

Take the parts that suit your own Sunday. Leave space for the rest.

PUBLICATION
TABLE / Issue 01
Food, culture and everyday stories

ART DIRECTION & LAYOUT
Oyebisi Ayobami

DESIGN NOTES
Original demonstration copy
Editorial typography
Linked photographic assets

Portfolio publication

TABLE

Good food.
Brighter days.